A Hundred Days in Tibet

In 2011, York Hovest accompanied the Dalai Lama during his visit to Germany. It was in the course of this visit that Hovest made him the promise to portray Tibet, and to reveal it to the world as it is today. After taking a year to prepare for this near-impossible journey, Hovest embarked on a breathtaking expedition, travelling through Tibet for a hundred days – on foot, motorbike and by jeep. Again and again he ventured into areas that are impenetrable to most visitors, either because they are difficult to get to or because access is forbidden. He was only able to succeed in doing so with the active support of the Tibetan people, who showed great faith in him by allowing him to share in their lives. Hovest accompanied them to secret locations, reaching the outer limits of his physical endurance – and that of his camera equipment – at temperatures of minus 30 degrees Celsius, 6000 metres above sea level. His spectacular images capture not only the sublime landscape, but also, through moving portraits of Tibetan nomads and monks, the soul of this mysterious country.

York Hovest, born in Wesel in 1978, is an internationally renowned advertising and fashion photographer. Living in Munich, he works across the world. His illustrated book A Hundred Days in Tibet was a huge bestseller and is translated into Italian and Dutch.

A Hundred Days in Amazonia

Photographer York Hovest has spent 100 days travelling through South America, where the most powerful river on earth winds through the largest area of tropical rainforest in the world, much of which remains virtually unexplored. Accompanied by shamans, tribal elders and their families, York Hovest sets forth on a journey through the Amazon basin, attempting to capture the beauty of the rainforest and its inhabitants on film. Following on from his experiences in Tibet, he once more approaches the country's indigenous people with curiosity and respect, garnering unforgettable insights into their way of life and bringing back moving images.

Highway Junkie

By Bike through the Middle of the USA

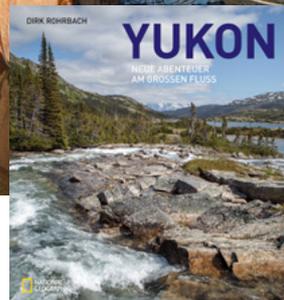

Nowhere does Dirk Rohrbach feel more at home than in America. He has made forty trips there over the course of twenty-five years, covering tens of thousands of miles – on foot, by canoe and bike, and in his 1974 Ford Truck Loretta. Here he takes to the road once more, a highway junkie hooked on the roads that snake across the nation's vast expanse and fascinated by the people of small-town America. Saddling up his bike, he travels across the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific, always on the lookout for unusual encounters. Ranchers, street cowboys, musicians, free spirits, dreamers – for Rohrbach they represent America's heartland. He takes us on a journey through a nation that always inspires him anew. A deeply personal homage to America and to life on the road, it makes the readers want to pack their bags at once and set off in search of the unknown.

Dirk Rohrbach

Born in Hanau in 1968, Dirk Rohrbach is a traveller, photographer, journalist and doctor. Thanks to his award-winning live reporting, he is one of the most sought-after speakers in the German-speaking world. For more than twenty-five years he has been journeying extensively around North America, as well as campaigning to protect the languages of indigenous American peoples. He travels between America and Europe, without permanent residence.

Yukon

New Adventures along the Great River

Dirk Rohrbach paddles more than 3,000 kilometres in a birch-bark canoe he built himself, travelling from the source of the Yukon to where it flows into the Bering Sea. Transporting the canoe over the White Pass via the old gold prospectors' railroad, he meets an Native American totem carver, visits the gold-mining town of Dawson and spends time with Andy, who travels over the frozen river with his twelve huskies during winter. At the end of this epic journey, Dirk Rohrbach stands at the mouth of the Yukon, the Northern Lights dancing in the broad sky above him. An unusual portrait of America that tells the unique story of the people who live on this mythical river.

ADVENTURE - E.O.F.T

What motivates adventurers of the twenty-first century to cruise down torrential rivers or to climb seemingly impregnable rocks? What pushes the summiteer to balance in dizzy heights on a tightrope? They surf in the polar night, explore widely spread cave systems and often set an example for sustainability with their extreme actions. They experience freedom and risk, adrenaline and moments of happiness. The European Outdoor Film Tour (E.O.F.T.) with more than 150,000 visitors across Europe every year stands for this intense life style.

This book assembles the greatest adventurers like mountaineer Alex Honnold, the famous Baffin Babes, ice climber Will Gadd and many more for the first time. Whether skier or mountain biker, whether in the Arctic or on an island in the South Sea: They all challenge their limits, live their passion and find their own way. And that is how they inspire us, the readers, who are dreaming of a little adventure and a short break from time to time ...

The World of Tomorrow

A Family on the Trail of Climate Change

An anthropologist, a photographer and four children: Jana and Jens Steingässer travelled the globe with their family, exploring regions affected by climate change. Going about their project with curiosity, empathy and a dash of humour, they try to find out what impact the warming of the earth's atmosphere will have on life on our planet. How will Greenlandic Inuit people live when ice has disappeared from the Arctic Sea? What are the consequences of desertification for goat-herders in South Africa? What will happen to Italian orchards when the Alpine glaciers melt? And how are we affected when people at the other end of the earth are fighting for their livelihoods? Climate change is nearly always described in terms of abstract theories, confusing statistics or dramatic images. At the heart of The World of Tomorrow are human beings and their stories, creating a multifaceted portrait of our planet and its endangered idylls.

styleguide Copenhagen

Eat. Shop. Love It.

Copenhagen is world-famous for crisp, elegant and timeless design. In the Danish capital brands both classic and new can be admired not only in stores, but everywhere. From Arne Jacobsen's 'Egg' chair to on-trend fashion designer Stine Goya's latest collection, they are all to be found in cafes, restaurants, hotels and museums. In Strøget, the longest pedestrian street in Europe, visitors will find everything that makes a design-lover's heart beat faster: furniture, lighting and fashion. More treasures await them in the little alleyways branching off the neighbouring streets. Moreover the city, located on the Øresund strait, knows how to combine the latest trends in design, art and architecture with a relaxed approach to life, and styleguide Copenhagen is the essential companion for anybody looking for something special beyond the tourist track.

Huts

Dream Destinations in the Alps

From the moment they set out, everyone who goes walking in the Alps looks forward to reaching their destination: the mountain huts where they can get a decent meal and let their gaze wander across the magnificent landscape - where they can spend a gloriously peaceful night and marvel at the early-morning sun rising above the peaks. Originally simple shelters, today the huts are generally comfortable destinations for people seeking some peace and quiet. With stunning images and vivid descriptions, photographer Bernd Ritschel and author Tom Dauer depict the most beautiful huts in the Bavarian, Austrian, Italian and Swiss Alps. Every page brings to life how it feels to go travelling in the mountains, and how wonderful it can be to sit in the sun at one of these dream destinations, floating above the clouds.

Masuria

In the Land of Thousand Lakes

A solitary wooden jetty in the evening light, seemingly endless avenues of trees, countless storks' nests: Dirk Bleyer's photographs are a love-letter to Masuria, the region that for 750 years was the southernmost tip of what was then East Prussia, and today is part of Poland. This illustrated volume displays a mixture of magnificent photographs of nature and living cultural history: the great lakes, interconnected through natural and artificial waterways; beautiful villages with characteristic wooden houses; and the cities of Danzig, Marienburg and Königsberg, their atmosphere steeped in history. In this book, the photojournalist Dirk Bleyer follows in the footsteps of his grandparents, and his fascination with East Prussian oddballs who stayed in their homeland can be traced back to them. Farmers, hunters, fishermen and sailors talk to him about their colourful lives, their work and existence closely interwoven with Masuria's dense forests, expansive fields and almost 3,000 lakes.

Eastern Canada

The Atlantic Provinces: A Dream by the Sea

Eastern Canada offers natural beauty in proportions unknown on this side of the Atlantic. Forests so thick you are amazed that all the elk can find their way around it. Enormous lakes, torrential rivers, shores and tundras, and a wild, awe-inspiring coastline, one of the most diverse and beautiful in the world. In this part of the country you are always travelling on water, whether across the Atlantic or one of the thousands of isolated lakes. Canada - it represents wilderness and vast expanses, campfires beneath a starry sky, peace and hospitality. Landscape- and wildlife-photographer Michael Lechner fell in love with the Atlantic provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Labrador. During the last fifteen years he went there whenever he could. With images that often look as if they have been painted and an astonishing feeling for colour, light and atmosphere, he captures the extraordinary fascination of Eastern Canada.

Ocean Adventure

Secrets of the Seas

Representing a new generation of underwater photographers who were raised with advanced diving and photo equipment, David Hettich has already been practicing his art for fifteen years. Now in his first large-format photography book, Hettich takes readers beneath the surface of the world's oceans to discover his deep-rooted passion: the secrets of the seas. His images portray the colorful and diverse marine ecosystems of the Galapagos, the Bahamas, the Dutch Antilles, South Africa, the Maldives, Christmas Island, Malaysia, the Philippines, Indonesia, Micronesia, Fiji, and Tonga. Hettich produces up-close and unforgettable photographs that reveal a world of vibrant coral reefs, massive whalesharks, seaturtle graveyards, swarms of jellyfish, and much more. Accompanied by text from Biologist Ulrich Erfurth and Hettich himself, Ocean Adventure uncovers Earth's aquatic treasures through the eyes of a man dedicated to our blue planet.

A Dream of Sailing

A Free Life

The play of the wind, streaming sails and lapping waves – for many only a dream. Heike Dorsch and her boyfriend Stefan Ramin took the chance to break away. In spring 2008 they bought the Catamaran "Baju" and started their world sailing tour. All along the route of the Mediterranean, the Cape Verde Islands, the Atlantic crossing, the Caribbean, Guatemala, Belize, the Panama Canal, the Galapagos Islands, the Pacific crossing to Vanuatu in the South Sea, the couple enjoyed their freedom for 3 ½ years – until it found a terrifying end with Stefan's murder. The Dream of Sailing shows the beautiful side of their tour. With beautiful photos revealing the colorful, diverse life, Heike Dorsch guides the reader through her great adventure, the beauty and the feeling of letting her dream come true – even in the face of the greatest tragedy of her life. A television film and documentary were broadcasted on German television in March 2015.

Under the Spell of the Bears

My Life in Alaska

No landscape has challenged or shaped Andreas Kielsing as much as Alaska. It was there he became the successful wildlife filmmaker he is today. His popular lectures always explore this theme. Before Kielsing became so successful as an author with his books on Germany, he was known by the name 'the bear man'. This new large-format illustrated book features his best photographs from almost twenty-five years in Alaska, above all of his encounters with grizzly bears. Hardly anybody has come so close to them as Kielsing, or has engaged with these creatures so intensively and across such a long span of time. He speaks very personally of his expeditions into the wilderness, which he has not simply taken alone, but also with his son and even with his whole family. Together, they experience the greatest adventures, discovering the beauties of nature in the wild far north.

Alaska

The Last Wilderness

'Aleyska', meaning 'great country', was the name given by the Aleut people to their homeland, and it certainly lives up to it in terms of size. It is four times bigger than Germany, yet has only about 700,000 inhabitants. Its natural landscape is as magnificent as it is diverse: polar bears and musk oxen live on the treeless, frozen tundras of the Arctic north; to the south, glaciers crumble majestically into the sea; in the southwest, enormous volcanoes tower up into the sky; and in the milder climates of the southeast the only remaining temperate rainforests on earth still flourish. Bernd Römmelt fell in love with this land of extremes on his first journey to Alaska over twenty years ago, and since then he has returned every year. He has photographed it over the course of more than thirty trips, guiding the reader across all its regions to its most remote corners, revealing it in all its stunning richness and beauty.

New Zealand

Paradise in the Pacific

Snowy mountain peaks, miles of sandy coastline, active volcanoes, plunging fjords, thick rainforests, geothermal pools, deep cave systems, rivers, lakes, waterfalls – there is no other country on Earth that contains such diverse and contrasting natural features in such close proximity. In addition to breathtaking scenery, New Zealand is also home to a fascinating blend of cultures including the indigenous Maori tribe, as well as colorful characters such as professional sheep herders, eclectic artists, and passionate ecologists. Flightless birds and other unique animals and plants round out the amazing biodiversity that results from the extreme isolation of this small chain of islands. In celebration of this enchanting world, NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC GERMANY presents a large-format photography book that captures the spirit of New Zealand in 200 stunning photos. From Auckland in the North to Stewart Island in the South, readers will discover the landscapes, animals, and people that make this country a paradise in the Pacific.

Volcanoes

Expeditions to the Most Dangerous Calderas of the World

Throughout his career, World Press Award winner Carsten Peter has focused on the extremes in nature – whether tornadoes, caves or deserts. And he is certainly one of the best volcano photographers in the world. Over the past twenty years, Carsten has gone on assignment for NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC MAGAZINE, to capture active volcanoes around the world: from Kamchatka to Indonesia, from Antarctica to Tanzania. This large format coffee-table book is stunningly diverse. He was as close as humanly possible when Mount Etna erupted in 2001, throwing rocks as big as cars 800 meters up into the air. He slept in a tent in the Nyiragongo Caldera in Congo for several days, and he climbed 450 meters down into the dangerous volcano on the South Sea island Vanuatu. He takes us on 14 fascinating expeditions and tells stories that combine thrilling adventures with the latest scientific discoveries. The book has a large map showing the tectonic plates, small maps of each volcano, a glossary and a list of the most famous outbreaks.
